

THE ITALIAN KULTURKAMPF INSPIRED BY AN ANGRY WOMAN.

At no time since 1870 have the dissensions

No sooner, however, had the Torlonia incident been mentioned taken place than the Prime Minister began to act with great severity toward all the public officials who had affixed their signatures to the petition. He even urged the King to sign a decree dismissing all Mayors and functionaries who had given any countenance to the document. King Humbert, however, absolutely declined to comply with his wishes in the matter.

In no wise disheartened by the Sovereign's refusal, Signor Crispi determined to attain his object in another way. For some twelve years past the great legal luminaries of the country had been engaged in drawing up a new code of criminal and civil law. The work had been carried on in a very disreputable manner, and under ordinary circumstances might have been spun out over another three or four years at least. But the Prime Minister decided otherwise. By his orders all the energies of the Government were directed toward its immediate completion, and, after almost superhuman efforts, it was finally got into sufficient shape to be discussed and voted by the Chambers at the early part of last month. Before proceeding further, it may be as well to state that, although exceedingly elaborate, it bears on its face marks of having been completed with undue haste, and, in fact, some curious legal complications are likely to arise from its lack of finish and carelessness of style. This is especially the case careful home costing from $600 to $1,200 each for their employes, with yards about them and with all the surroundings to make life pleasant. He told this to General Beaver as a tariff example, and added to it the fact that they had lowered the price of their wares 33-1-3 per cent, but that the American manufacturers were still able to undersell the Englishman and make a small profit. That night General Beaver spoke from the State House porch at Columbus, and after illustrating the effect of the tariff on these workers of the cotton factory, he added:

[illegible]

NOTES HERE AND THERE CONCERNING SOME WELL-KNOWN PEOPLE.

"I am certain in this audience who does not think it was worth while to put on that tariff, so that these people of Zanesville could have good wages as compared with poor wages abroad; a plot of ground in which they can keep their families, and above all that section and industry which enables a man to give his wife a warm bed by his in the morning."

The General dropped the subject at this point and went on to other matters. The next day in front of the Neil House, where he

ENDICOTT KNOWS HOW IT IS HIMSELF NOW.
FASHIONING Dispatch to The Boston Advertiser.

Secretary Endicott visited the Senate yesterday, and was applied one of the dispatches for information regarding the whereabouts of a certain senator, the senate employe in a most indifferent manner.

"You will have to go around to the ladies' reception room; we don't have in cards here."

"But I am not a lady," said he, "I simply wish to ascertain if Senator— is in his seat."

"And I tell you," insisted the doorkeeper gruffly, "that you must go around to the ladies' reception room."

Endicott drew back embarrassed, saying that it was not his business to obtain information of the seating bill of information without so much ceremony.

Mortified and confused, he ran into Senator Vance's office and sought the assistance of the member. After came to the assistance of the Secretary, and escorted him triumphantly into the Democratic lobby.

When some misguided pilgrim on life's rough way came to New York and saw the great Senator with Thurman? He is surprised at the enthusiasm with which the people rally round the flag and exclaim: "He's all wrong!"—Lincoln Journal.

THE AUTHOR MAKES A CALL

As fast as I could, I climbed back over the wall, the loose mossy stones moving dangerously as I climbed. I went swishing through the grass, forgetting to try to think of something for Mar Baker's Idjit road, remembering only what a magnificent young

"But he and Orlando did not know each other," I asserted.

Hersford's Acid Phosphate
MAKES DELICIOUS LEMONADE.
A teaspoonful added to a glass of hot or cold water, and sweetened to the taste, will be found refreshing and invigorating.